"I look forward to joining AON and helping to drive more improved health outcomes via the pathology lab," said Dr. Olson. "The reports generated through the lab play an important role in the patients' care plans and clinical outcomes, and I am honored to be a part of AON's pathology team who are all passionate about elevating patient care and delivering the best services available to physicians and their patients."

AON's in-house pathology laboratory serves over 100 physicians in 18 states and has earned the "Golden Standard" certification from the College of American Pathologists. The state-of-the-art facility, which is headquartered in Fort Myers, is staffed by a team of highly specialized laboratory scientists, hematopathologists and surgical pathologists. Because of the design of the network, AON physicians have access to a wide range of testing services that can be done through the in-house laboratory including histology, flow cytometry, cytogenetics, fish panel, fish individual probes and molecular tests.

"AON pathology laboratory is integrated into patient care as staff is readily available to answer questions from physicians and patients," said AON Chief Medical Officer Stephen "Fred" Divers, MD. "Additionally, our lab uses Lean and Six Sigma tools to improve our processes and test turnaround times so that diagnoses can be made earlier, easing patient anxiety as well as ensuring necessary treatments are not delayed."

"We are excited to welcome Dr. Olson to AON," said AON Chief Executive Officer Todd Schonherz. "Pathology is an integral part of oncology care and clinical research initiatives. It remains our top priority for investments so that our patients continue to receive the quality care they deserve."
