The Summit, held from February 28 to March 1 at Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C., gathered healthcare leaders, health policy experts and key influencers in cancer care delivery for educational and networking opportunities, according to the ACCC event website. The Summit's purpose was to analyze innovative solutions to cancer care challenges.

Rahman, AON's chief strategy & innovation officer, participated as a panelist in the sessions "Deep Dive 3: Payer, Manufacturer, and Supply Chain Challenges"; and "Deep Dive 6: Artificial and Business Intelligence Technology."

Sabo-Wagner, AON's vice president of clinical innovation, joined Rahman as a panelist in the session "Deep Dive 6: Artificial and Business Intelligence Technology."

"It is an honor to have been invited to share my expertise and perspective as a panelist at the Annual Meeting & Cancer Center Business Summit," said Rahman. "The Summit lays the groundwork to dive into pressing issues that face cancer care while exploring innovative solutions to the challenges that face our industry. I enjoyed having the opportunity to engage in dynamic conversations and exchange best practices with fellow panelists and attendees."

"We are excited to have our leaders serve as panelists of this prestigious event," said Todd Schonherz, AON's chief executive officer. "This is a testament to the depth of experience and thought leadership within our organization and illustrates our commitment to driving positive change within the industry. I am confident that our leaders made significant contributions to the discussions and inspired fellow industry peers."
